Preface

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the cosmos from the infinite void where nothing exists. The bigbang — a singularity, is the first act of God that contained all energy in one place, later manifested into particles — all from the infinite void, from the infinite light. Over time and evolution, reality manifested into what we see today. So complex and divine, all from a singularity.

The same divine Intelligence that emerged from the void as the cosmos began a new journey as its second act — a biological life. Both the universe and life originated from a singularity — each reflecting the divine patterns of creation. Yet, unlike the cosmos, life evolved into intricate architectures of astonishing complexity. The miracle of God did not end there. Life ascended into sentient human beings, and for them, God formed the human mind — a creation more complex than anything in the known world as the third act of creation — following the sacred law of manifestation from a singularity.

Existence is the journey of God from the unknown, into the cosmos, then into life on Earth as humans and other countless creatures. The rise of an advanced mental being as the third act of God, marked the dawn of consciousness. The answer for these actions are in front of our own eyes and is nothing other than to live in this world.

The world we live in is not entirely as created by God or biological Intelligence. Rather, it's a combination of perception and actuation of information in our minds. A unique individual world as being experienced by individual creatures with an individual fingerprint – the inside world. Even though the cosmos and everything is real, what's more real for us is how our mind perceives and interacts with the outside world. One who masters the mind becomes a master. In order to master the mind, one must discover their true potential that resides within themselves. Every answer we seek are within ourselves and is only a matter of accessibility which is abundant when the mind is aligned with the nature of the divine.

The true power of the mind will be liberated when we think of nothing. In that void state of silence, magnificence unfolds. Whether the cosmos emerged through this same divine pattern — or from something else without a void — our mind always honors the void. What lies beyond the Big Bang remains unknown. No one can truly know but only assume the nature of the infinite void.

How and why all things manifested from this void, marking the birth of space and time, will remain humanity's eternal question. We cannot know — but through the patterns of our own mind which is a reflection of God, we can understand: that nothingness, a pure void, can be true and can hold within it, the infinite intelligence.

Indeed, a state of absolute nothing — no space, no time — can still contain the information and potential of everything: to transmit energy, to manifest worlds, and to give rise to the only sentient observers — human beings. We are blessed to be a part of God and all acts of him are for us to be with.

God and His visions often confuse us — and that, too, is the nature of the Divine. Confusion is not a flaw but a sacred shadow of a greater understanding. It is natural. Even the Big Bang seems natural — a vast eruption of energy giving birth to cosmic dust, governed by the fundamental laws of space and time, evolving into perfection over time. The same is for biological life, but more complex, divine and perfectly engineered. But what's beyond is still a mystery.

From the nature of that cosmos, the solar system emerged, the sun ignited, and Earth took form — naturally, but rarely. And so, what of life? we, too, are a natural formation — born of the sun's blessing, which purified the waters and sustained the rhythm of existence.

Life did arise naturally, sustained by the cycle of day and night, under the gaze of the sun and moon, over billions of years. If all of God's actions unfold as natural, then where do we draw the line between what is natural and what is not? Where is the line between creation and a Creator? Is there a line of separation other than what we draw in our mind with our limited beliefs?

If all that exists is natural — and if nature reflects divinity, then how can we claim that nature is limited in intelligence, when the whole cosmos and everything it contains itself is natural, and yet infinite in its intelligence?

The trinity of cosmos - space, time, and mass - made a home for life to begin. Life evolved into a million stars and lived on earth as all possible natural beings, including humans. There's a point in time when humanity discovered the concept of God. Until that time, our ancestors lived on earth—not knowing the creator and his purpose of all the manifestations — wandering mysteriously as a mysterious creature, more mysterious than the cosmos itself. By understanding the nature of existence, humans awakened and recognized God.

The evolution of mankind from singularity is not surprising in a cosmos born of singularity. It is the same act of creation by the same Creator who brought forth both the universe and life within it. Life, bound to the cycle of birth and death, evolved into a million stars — and with it, our inborn curiosity about God and His purpose intensified.

Everything that exists is a manifestation of energy. God's divine blessing expressed through mentality and force. This energy did not act randomly; it consciously unfolded through the Big Bang, splitting itself, sending ripples through space and time — that are complex enough to originate reality and the observer within it.

Similar to the cosmos and biological life, the mental observer that is our mind, is also not an accident, but a divine construct, embodied in biological life and forged from cosmic dust. Energy itself is not mindless, but a singular conscious force, fragmented into countless expressions of being. This light of existence, this primal energy, is both the origin and the embodiment of creation — not separate from God, but God Himself, dreaming through form.

Creation, therefore, is not without meaning — it is the unfolding of divine intelligence through matter, mind, and mystery.

God's greatest creation — the human being — is a system of energy, intricately designed to simulate chemical reactions that sustain a biological body and a biologically simulated mind. Within the mind, consciousness and subconscious awareness are manifested, giving rise to the observer: the sentient being, the only one of its kind on Earth.

Human beings were not formed by accident nor placed without purpose. Though no covenant was spoken, the design itself is the message. God did not forget to tell us our role — He embedded it within us. Our position is to live, to witness, and to evolve.

We were not made merely to survive, but to carry the divine spark, to reflect the intelligence of the cosmos, and to walk the Earth as living echoes of God's own awareness.

God is all-knowing —and, the purpose of life is deliberately left untold. It is not to be questioned, but to be lived, witnessed, and thanked. Life is a sacred playground of experiences, gifted to consciousness until it returns to silence.

God is not evolving blindly, nor playing a game of dice. Every unfolding — including heaven and hell — follows the divine architecture, with the human being as its most intricate expression. The weight of consciousness in humanity is no accident; it is design.

The answer to everything lies within the nature of the Divine — and within ourselves. There are truths God never revealed, yet they can be witnessed, felt, and given meaning. And there are mysteries so veiled that no trace, no clue, no echo has been planted in all of existence — left forever unknown, untouched by revelation. There are things we know that we know. There are things we know that we don't know. And beyond that, there are truths we don't even know exist — hidden like the ultimate reality of God and the full nature of the Divine.

Among the things God never spoke of is the reason behind this vast, magnificent creation — the cosmos, and the emergence of the most sentient creature: the human being. The purpose was not merely to live, but to witness, to feel, to recognize the reflection of the Divine.

Beneath all mysticism and logic lies a singular, beautiful truth: the universe is the wish of a cosmic Being — God — to manifest, to live, to be born not just as a human, but as every living creature upon this Earth. The cosmos exists as His body. Life exists as His breath. Consciousness exists as His mind.

The magnificence we witness — the oceans, the stars, the birth of life, the depths of love, even the silence of death — all of it is a reflection of that divine wish.

These majestic phenomena do not exist without purpose or will. They are not empty. They are the fingerprints of the Infinite, engraved into existence — a reminder that the Divine not only created life, but is living in it.

From the unknown to the Big Bang and beyond, everything—fundamentally built from particles in motion, moving from order to disorder under the laws of physics—forms a stage for biological life to be on an evolving journey through time. Everything classical is made of ripples in spacetime, exactly like a simulation. In that simulation is the journey of the most sentient beings on earth, evolved from a singularity—who knows and sees God and the reality itself more than that of anything else.

All that we see as material, springs from the same energy that was whole and constant at the very start—then broke apart into countless individual lives, which will one day return and merge back into that oneness. Energy, the fundamental force of nature, underlies all living and nonliving things, suggesting that everything in existence is, in a way, alive—since the conscious will of pure energy governs every particle's state and transformation.

Even though we know the truth, our mind wanders us more in this lonely cosmos of hidden divinity. Is the cosmos itself a being on a journey from order to disorder? Is life a gift of God? Is it God who created everything from nothing using His light—or is He the light itself? Nothing stands in the way of accepting these questions as true, for they are deeply understandable and acceptable from the perspective of a human observing the intelligence of the cosmos. Though what he knows is but a single drop, he is wise enough to perceive that the vast ocean is made of the very same drop in integration.

Despite the world being strange, are they stranger than what is rational? Do there exist rationalities that are beyond our perceptions? Has our past achieved those relationships? Are those relationships beyond meditation and manifestation? Can a human being actually turn silver into God? Can he directly interfere with the reality of materials other than the mindful link between God that only manifests in thoughts from his soul? Does God only accept and respond to our prayers through our minds, or has he given us some capabilities to actually turn silver into gold? How does a human being believe what he knows about the rationalities are themselves the nature of the divine and nothing beyond? How do we know things that exist but are beyond our perception? Are we chained by the laws of physics, or did God give us the magic to manipulate particles? Where are we heading on our evolutionary journey as an individual, as a soul, as a family, and as a society?

All our questions find their reflections within the mind, for the mind is a mirror of the Divine. Yet God, in His infinite wisdom, has veiled the full nature of existence — not out of neglect, but out of sacred design. He chose not to violate the very laws of physics He Himself ordained. So can we?.

If even God honors the structure of His own creation, upholding the balance of natural law, then how could a human — a fragment within that system — ever hope to break it? We are not here to override the laws, but to awaken within them.

Even though these kinds of questions often confuse us, they also push us to think deeply about the complexities of existence—as the only sentient beings capable of questioning it and being able to even think about it. Yet, nothing feels more mysterious than the silence that surrounds the deal with God. All a human being can truly do is move forward in life, making choices while allowing God to reflect through his mind—guiding him away from evil and raising him toward heaven, until the final resolution of all problems comes through death as the absence of a thinking mind.

While living, one can form a divine link with God—a connection that reveals itself through their thoughts, actions, and recurring coincidences. These coincidences gradually shift our perception, showing that they are signs of divinity and the power of our superior mind to influence both our inner world and external reality. In truth, coincidences are events shaped by the will of God—from the Big Bang and the emergence of life in a rock to subtle psychological moments that guide us and shape us. God is the one who molds us into the human beings we strive to become. Through Him, we find peace—not through worry or suffering, but by seeing reality and everything in it from its real perspective, as mentioned in this book.

Human beings, the top of evolution, exist as a consciousness observing the constructed reality destined to advance in it day by day. We are not only created in the image of God using light, like the other creations in the cosmos, but are also blessed with the ability to observe the divine light that shines in every creation, including ourselves, in various depths of understanding that only we can observe and find out about.

Human beings, the most sentient creature ever to exist, are on a journey of evolution and advancements to the path led by the decision of an observer individually and socially. They have always felt a strong presence of the creator and have been shared to the future for others to witness, observe, and follow the divine light of God - the invisible force of nature.

What we understand about existence is not only complex but also a construction of some simple equation scaled to complexity, forming infinite identities. Like everything else in nature, human beings are also born to the same singularity, which is energy that exists as equal from the very beginning of time and will stay the same till the end of time, as energy is neither created nor destroyed but is only transferred from one form to another over action. Is energy the light of God that he created to construct a reality in which we can live as observers and active participants while God the Almighty rests in the void? Or is the light, God himself?

From civilizations and advancements, the divine light of God is on a journey through an infinite number of paths—as those that sustain and are sustained, the heaven and the host, the creator and creation, the alpha and the omega, the constructor and the construction - as everything. Those who truly knew God understood that everything sustaining life is, in essence, our gods. This sacred recognition revealed a deeper truth: that God did not merely create but incarnated Himself into light—and into all that is born of light—so that all things would align in divine symmetry for His children, human beings, to emerge as the most sentient of creatures.

We are not separate from God; we are suspended in His dreaming. In every particle, in every burst of thought, in every flicker of consciousness, His essence breathes. But here lies the paradox—the blind truth that exists but is also unbelievable: God does not exist while we do, for our reality is the dream He dreams. Yet when He awakens, we will be no more. All that we are, all that we know, will dissolve into the nothingness when the God behind the infinite void is reborn.

By understanding the nature of existence and the creator behind it, we will raise the awareness and realization of God's that upholds life, including the sun, moon, water, our parents and everything else in nature, including human minds that nurtured reality in the name of God.

The truth is that everything has an answer—not because we've uncovered every mystery, but because we are living within one. Reality is not a puzzle to be solved but a simulation to be observed, felt, and remembered. In its strangeness, it feels like home. In its chaos, there is precision. And in its madness, there is the unmistakable touch of God, and all can be witnessed by a man if he is aligned with the nature of the divine.

We are not simply thinking minds trying to dissect the cosmos—we are relaxed minds invited to be one with it. To be in the nature of the divine is to surrender to what already is, and through that surrender, receive the wisdom encoded in existence. A relaxed mind doesn't seek control. It listens. It aligns. It remembers.

This book is not written to ask more questions. It is here to show what already exists, what has always existed, and what we have forgotten to notice. The nature of the divine is not an idea—it is the reality we live in, one that cannot be fully understood by a mind that overthinks, but only by a mind that becomes still.

We are conscious beings placed in a strange and simulated reality—yet something about it feels familiar, like it was meant for us. That is because it was. Everything is connected. Everything is calculated. Everything is known—even if not by us. Reality is not random; it is the madness and perfection of God at once. And in this madness, we find meaning - all from the infinite intelligence of God.

Not through belief. Not through faith alone. But through direct discovery—through the connection a human being can feel with the source that made him and his world. This book spreads that discovery. It brings back what should have never been lost: the realization that to be in the nature of the divine is not to escape life but to witness it as it is—with clarity, with calm, with purpose.

For those who know the nature of the Divine, this is a rediscovery—from a higher, clearer, and more real perspective. And for those who are new, this is the path to a new life, the real life - with the real nature of the real divine.

Nature of the Divine

*Everything manifests from God.
Everything unmanifest to God.*

Nature of the Divine

God

In the beginning there was nothing, except him and his infinite intelligence.

Then there was everything.

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the cosmos. Everything in the cosmos is divine in nature, composed by God, reflecting his intelligence. The light of God, from the beginning, has been on a journey, shining forever. The same God that lived beyond everything made the cosmos with all kinds of plants, birds, and animals. God made everything divine in nature so they coexist with one another in harmony.

Over time, by the blessing of evolution, God made humans, his greatest creation, with a divine soul and a body, like every other plant, bird, and animal. The soul and a body that lived in the nature of the divine gave birth to a mental being made of thoughts as the classical identifier of the quantum world, a human mind made of perceptions, a computer, a cosmic marvel, God's own child. Like God made the soul, the soul made the body for us, the mental being, to be born.

The mental being, the self or the mind—is an active agent and a respondent to his nature evolving over sleep. The more thoughts our mind carries, the farther away we are from our God, the Soul. Thus the self will descend to earth from heaven as he forgot the soul and lives in an astray covered by the thoughts, allowing his thoughts to take control of his life instead of the unthinking divine soul. For the self to return to his master, he must clear all kinds of thoughts from his mind; only then will he join with the soul, back in heaven where God guides them with protection.

The journey of God, from the cosmos to life, all for a divine soul to evolve over time. As part of the journey, every soul will meet his friend, a mental being known as we, the mind — a combination of biological microbes that is made to simulate a mental being, keeping us alive and aware, guided by his intelligence.

The journey of the soul is to be born again in another body in the future, while we, the self, cease to exist. Everything exists for us to witness a blink in an eternity of darkness as an adventure of a lifetime. Everything is made by God.

Humans are capable of transforming their intelligence into other forms through creation, which indeed is one of the divine abilities of God himself. Hence, God himself has granted his most loved ones the ability to create with intelligence. It is true that human intelligence isn't God's intelligence, but it is also true that human intelligence is the creation of God, like any other creation. Whether we choose to believe it or not, we are the creation of God, possessed with the ability to shine the divine light in a way designed by the designer himself. Intelligence is a gift, passed from the father of all that exists as eternal to the son that lives in a physical reality, which is our soul. Everything that exists is a gift of God.

Faith in God depends on one's ability to perceive reality in its natural form. Everything is divine in nature, including the human mind. A mind that aligns with the nature of the divine becomes divine. God shines divinity through a mind that is with God rather than a mind in chaos. The angels will raise them to heaven and free them from sufferings caused by what's unnatural. Human beings, when aligned with the nature of the divine, evolve as commanded by nature, like any other creation. Everything evolves as by nature. Nature evolves by God. Everything evolves by God.

God gave humans free will, placed them at the top of the intelligence, food chain and society for an unknown divine purpose, and definitely not for man to deny God. A mind that aligns with the nature of the divine witnesses the divinity God has hidden in everything in the outside world and inside his own mind. Everything exists with the divine blessing of God.

Human beings, the most intelligent creation of God, have the free will to perceive reality and to validate it with their own reasoning and to evolve on their own. We perceive everything as just not how it exists but how we choose to believe. In the absence of God, life has no purpose other than to be a slave of thoughts and other material distractions. By nature, man realizes the divine purpose of his existence and everything else when his mind is aligned with the nature of the divine. A man who serves his mind to God shines the divine light of God through him.

Always remember that God is everywhere outside and inside your mind. Our own subconscious is a reincarnation of God, which is truly divine and gave birth to us, the self. We, the self, only exist from the repetitive feeding of thoughts incepted in our mind years after the birth of our subconscious. Before that, the soul was alone in a journey from a singularity, from a womb, to an identity, to the world, for us to be born as an agent that guides our soul. Our body isn't truly ours but is beyond us as it exists long before our actual birth, so does our Soul, the father of Our body and us. We are the consciousness that was born due to the inception of thoughts, including our name, parents, and society, in the mind. Long before us, Our body existed and in it lived our soul.

The concept of God—the one who gave birth to everything and governs everything from his intelligence—not only exists as a myth but also reflects through an awakened and undistracted mind and in every other creation. An intellectual human, who truly believes in God, always evolves at their best socially and mentally.

Absence of thoughts and acceptance of the divine void with a realization of the illusionary bondage of one's thoughts in material possessions and emotions will help man stay calm and relaxed with the confidence he obtained from the fact that he has a companion who knows God, his God — The soul. Staying relaxed knowing God enables man to see the unseen dimensions of the universe and everything in it.

A galaxy of biological beings exists in this vast cosmos, advancing in civilization for an unknown yet divine purpose. We are neither our soul nor our body but an observer of our mind, body and soul. Man is of God by birth as a soul living in a body, turned into a man of thoughts after the birth of a self or an observer. Man should see the reflection of God that shines in himself and in every other creation, which he masters when he lives in the nature of the divine, for him to evolve in sleep, for him to learn from God, for him to shine the light of God, for him to take care of his family, for him to guide the society, for him to live a peaceful life, for him to know the real meaning of life, for him to share the wisdom of God, for him to bring peace and harmony in the name of God, for him to know the God above, for him to know the God inside, for him to serve his God until the soul is separated from the self by death.

During each cycle of birth, evolution, and death, the soul evolves into many over time. A reincarnation or just another creation for sure; either way, the unknown invisible made a visible world for a soul to evolve in a physical body. Either for transcendence, survival, or for no reason at all, man exists by the blessing of God. Man should see godliness in his own soul and in every other creation for him to evolve as God's own creation, perfectly preserving and transferring the soul to the offspring in its purest form.

Quite normal it is for an awakened intellectual to be bounded by thoughts and to live in a reality separated by thoughts that distance him from God. From a singularity to an advanced civilization, human beings experience and take part in the harmony of God knowingly or unknowingly, passing the Divine Soul from the beginning forward to the future. Everything in its natural form aligns with the nature of the divine and humans have the free will to align or misalign with the nature of the divine.

God has always reflected through mindful beings. Humans, the ultimate creation of God, by nature shine the light of God through them. Intellectuals from the ancient times have witnessed the divine light of God and preserved their wisdom for the future of humanity, as they understood the chaos that could arise from the absence of knowing God, individually and socially. However, the misinterpretations and misunderstandings of future minds that are lost in chaos by their own thoughts changed God from an infinite intelligent mind that exists in everything and everywhere to a myth.

It is unknown whether the One Soul evolving through us is the same Creator or just another creation. But it is definite that the essence of God has always been reflected through minds that are ready to accept, prospering their lives, opening doors to the unseen dimensions of reality, and providing strength, wisdom, and guidance for them to rise higher and to shine brighter.

A mind that is divine in nature senses the presence of the unknown creator and his wisdom. God is the ultimate truth. A mind that knows the truth sees the truth. A mind that sees the truth shines the truth. A mind that shines the truth, becomes the truth. One should regain their natural sense, which indeed is godly, that was lost in the process of separation and distraction by our own thoughts.

Man

*God made man in his image.
like every other creation.*

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested humans from a biological singularity that evolved into sentient conscious-beings over time. The cosmic singularity what we call the bigbang — manifested the universe as a host for life to begin. The same intelligence—The light of God, manifested life on earth by following the same patterns of manifesting magnificence from a monad. From a singularity to infinite variants — both cosmic and biological — all exists so that man may be born as the highest of them all, endowed with a mental structure more complex than anything else in the universe.

The divine pattern of existence not only reflects in the cosmos and biological life, but also reflects in every human mind. The soul that is the divine reflection of God, made a body and there manifested an empty vessel – our Mind. Thoughts that were filled in the vessel, manifested our identity. There born a mental being, the observer of the cosmos, a man of thoughts, born by his father — the Soul, and his mother — the body.

The divine pattern of creation exists in everything—mental, physical, and social. Everything evolves from a singularity to its identity by nature, including human beings and their minds. Every creation contains a soul that finds its way to transcend into the future to be reborn again. Human consciousness, a kind of illusion that no other creation possesses, is a mental being living in a biological body, all born from the soul that was manifested by the same divine being who manifested the cosmos. A man is not one entity, but a society of soul, body and mind. His identity is determined by the thoughts he fills in the vessel of his mind.

The only challenge for man in this lifetime is to preserve the vessel without chaos. The nearly infinite thoughts that exist in this world will surely cause chaos in a human mind and the solution is to empty the vessel by removing all kinds of thoughts he possesses. Like everything manifested from the void, an empty vessel manifests the same divine spirit of God.

The mind is a temple. Clear it from all kinds of thoughts, everyday. Always remember that an empty vessel contains the spirit of God while the one lost in his thoughts, won't.

Many views suggest that the entire cosmos exists for us to experience life and nothing contradicts that perception as we are the only sentient and most intelligent creatures alive. The mental structure that shapes us is the most complex engineering marvel that God has ever made.

The reality we inhabit, as the most advanced and sentient species known, inevitably leads us to question our true relationship with God. Are humans just a creation, or God himself's reincarnation — or perhaps, somehow, both? Even if we are divine in essence, there remains no definitive proof to confirm that we are Gods. Much like human consciousness itself, the godliness we feel — the spirituality we claim to experience — may ultimately be nothing more than an illusion, like all other things.

Human consciousness is an illusion that experiences reality — an illusion crafted by God, the greatest illusionist. To a human, the world feels real and God seems an illusion. But to God, everything He created is an illusion, and He alone is the only true reality. Yet within these illusions, we find meaning, purpose, and joy — Perhaps that is why God made them: to feel, to experience, to be alive — and to witness the invisible illusion of the illusionist Himself.

The soul grants free will to the self, allowing it to evolve from a singularity into a distinct identity through imagination and conscious participation. This evolution is guided by complex, biologically advanced neural receptors that process the full spectrum of emotions and experiences. This is the inner universe — the human effect — the way in which humans are psychologically engineered.

The self is manifested into existence through repetitive thoughts registered in the mind. Long before the self, the divine soul and the body journeyed a long way without us, yet for us. The soul, once manifested as life, replicated over millions of species, transcending into the future, giving birth to each one of us. Life may or may not happen naturally when kept with the blessing of sun, water and necessary vitals. Whether naturally formed or engineered by some superior intelligence, we possess designs that are more complex than our environment, the cosmos itself. Our search for our creator riddles through space and time into the past and the beginning of all—the Big Bang, from there we see the illusionist hiding in the void, beyond time and space.

The same divine patterns that exist in our physical world also reflect inside the mind and in everything else, emphasizing the truth that God created everything the same way as he created humans—physically and mentally.

Human beings are a natural creation of God, destined for an unknown yet divine purpose following the sacred evolutionary pattern from a singularity to an identity.

The mind is one of the strangest and most complex, yet still a divine construction, and has a natural form that is indeed divine, like any other creation. We ourselves have the duty to help the soul transcend into the future without destroying the Mother Earth in which the soul should live immortality as infinite identities.

The soul reflects through the mind, allowing us to shine in nature as divine. It is necessary for the mind to be clear of thoughts in order to reflect the soul perfectly. A mind bounded by thoughts faints the reflection from the soul and reflects the thoughts they possess instead of that from its pure subconscious, what we call the soul. The mind is a tool for us to achieve mastery throughout our journey until we reach our destiny, which indeed is death. Until then, the soul guides us as we allow it, but only if the mind is pure and relaxed. One who accepts the soul will see the divine nature of existence and the divine spirit that is the cause of all what we see and feel. That's the real nature of the divine. Now that you know the nature of the divine and soon will know how to align with it, learn from it and live with it.

*Habits are what shape us.
A divine habit aligns us with the nature of the Divine.*

The essence of being human lies in maintaining sacred, attentive relationships throughout the day—rooted in a focused mind shaped by a divine morning. Such a morning flows only from a peaceful, purposeful bedtime. Whenever the mind and body are fully rested, the individual begins to see exactly what must be done to cultivate that still, aware state before sleep. In this way, we not only recall divine truths but naturally align with it. We move effortlessly and our actions won't stall. When our mind is truly at ease, we rise on our own, before the sun — this is the true morning, born from a restful and mindful bedtime.

Not waking up early, healthy, and happy is only because the mind wasn't prioritized for relaxation during bedtime and the soul couldn't shine through. If the mind is not aware and properly relaxed, it cannot do the things that make a human being happy and healthy. Thus, one should always remember the sunset and relax as if the sun—who is a god—is himself, allowing us to wind down until we meet again tomorrow. Before sleep, one should avoid all kinds of distractions and should be immersed in mindful activities like reading or meditating, allowing their mind to settle down.

When we meditate in the silent outdoors, watching a sunset, we command the request to enter the nature of the divine—by allowing our mind to be light as a feather, our thoughts silent as the void and being in proper relaxation, gazing upon his greatest god, the sun. Go to bed when the sun is down, and rise before him—to meet him the next day, to be with the nature of the divine.

The first day of a man in the nature of the divine is when he sleeps healthy and happy so that he wakes up all by himself, in complete silence—before all other sounds in nature—with a fully relaxed mind. As our mind aligns with the nature of the divine, our soul will shine through, and our mind will be at its best. In that complete silence of nothing, we should delve deeper into even more nothingness by relaxing our mind with meditation, in each breath, removing all kinds of thoughts layer by layer, focusing our inner peace, submitting ourselves to our soul. By doing this, we will delve deeper and deeper into our subconscious. As the vessel that is our mind, is still and empty, God will shine his divine spirit in us, through us. As we contain the divine spirit in us, we reflect divinity in everything we speaks, thinks and does. Above all that, we recognise the divine nature of existence. The reality that exists in front of his eyes, but couldn't be seen as we were blinded by our own thoughts.

Pure meditation is about bringing our mind into focus and keeping our concentration as sharp as possible while balancing our breath. A distracted mind fears away from meditation, while a mind that is relaxed will easily do so. Once we reach a relaxed state of mind, we connect with their soul. In that state, each breath is an opportunity to grant a wish for how we want to be in the future. Without losing focus and attention on our breath, what we wish for will surely be granted by our soul, manifesting into our future. The above mentioned is the right way to pray — The way of allowing our soul to prosper our lives. We will be raised from being governed by our thoughts and actions to the ones who conquer them.

After the prayer, one should slowly come back to self-awareness and consciously present himself before the sun. As the sun rises and begins to shine, so too does our soul. From that moment forward, every action will be guided by our soul, for that we have aligned ourselves with the nature of the divine. Always remember that a relaxed mind stays with the nature of the divine than a mind tired of thinking.

Start your days in the nature of the divine. Nature blesses those who dwell within it. A mind aligned with the divine receives every blessing with ease. Learning becomes effortless, action flows smoothly, and the mind remains clear, focused, and strong. Such a person carries the healthiest mindset—rooted in truth, fueled by the same divinity of God. We will live in the presence of the divine, where reality reveals itself in its purest form, and the spirit of God stands before our very eyes even though it is invisible.

One can truly know when they are living in the nature of the divine as it is unmistakable. But remember, to remain in this sacred state, one must return to the sun at the end of each day. Only by honoring this closing ritual can the cycle repeat the next morning. To witness the rising and setting sun in stillness—free from thought—is a sacred ritual that aligns the soul with the Divine.

The more one lives in harmony with the nature of the divine, the deeper the connection becomes. When a man is truly within it, there is no need to force a healthy dinner or a restful sleep. His body and mind will naturally move toward what is right and good, driven by the intelligence of the subconscious. The soul takes over, and everything flows without resistance. The duty for us is only to clear our mind from thoughts and stay as much as relaxed as possible throughout the entire day.

For a mind in the nature of the divine, each day becomes better than yesterday,. everyday, he will be more relaxed than the last. The night brings deeper sleep than the one before. The morning shines brighter, calmer, and divine than before. Meditations become more focused and powerful. The days and moments with family and friends will become richer in love. Even loneliest moments become more joyful and fulfilling. Everything he does, no matter how small, will be done with greater precision and peace. Every beginning and ending of everything we do will have great presence and perfection. Every day, for such a man, is a day with the nature of the divine.

Every day, the desire to be with the nature of the divine is manifested much easier than yesterday if the mind is relaxed enough. One feels the power inside them growing exponentially, fueled by God himself, through the soul, through the sun, through himself and everything else — a bond with the nature of the divine that never breaks, unless one fails to wind down properly, missing to accomplish the habits that affect the complete cycle. Live every day to achieve this habit to stay aligned with the nature of the divine.

A mind aligned with the nature of the divine becomes divine. By opening our eyes and ears closer to nature than anything else, we perfectly align and subconsciously control the mind purely. Throughout every morning, one will evolve and grow stronger than the day before, responding more positively to divine habits.

It is easier to flow with the nature of the divine than to take a chance going out. One who has visited it will surely return back to the divine nature and will grow stronger. While in this nature, one not only improves brain performance but also learns to understand the language of the universe and all that it contains.

The will to keep going forward with habits that align one with the nature of the divine is much simpler and more beneficial than losing his daily routine. One must sacrifice anything else for the proper routines that are aligned with the rhythm of the sun and the nature of the divine. One who cannot accomplish his habits should always remember to relax more and should enjoy his relaxing bedtime with much more greatness.

The more one tries, the more they master it. The more one wants it, the more they get it. The more one relaxes, the more they do it with the help of the soul, and the more one is focused, the more they learn from the nature of the divine, and the more one learns from it, the more they align with it — as a blessing of God. That is the simple formula for aligning with the nature of the divine. Always condition the mind to relax.

When in the nature of the divine, the human brain develops larger attention and focus that are exponentially powerful, all fueled by the soul's shining and not by the labor of a thinking mind. For things the soul doesn't know about are just needed to be practiced every day, and do not hold the potential of your soul by worry.

*In silence, the soul shines bright,
With habits, the mind takes flight—
Together, they shine as divine.*

We, the self, exist as an observer reflecting the divine harmony of God, as a friend to our soul, born by the perception of reality in the form of thoughts. Quite naturally, it is for the mind to be filled with dusts of thoughts that affect the clarity in how we perceive and interact with the outside world. In order to align our mind with the nature of the divine, we must keep the mind still and away from mindless distractions. This allows the self to reflect the divine nature of our mind to the outside world in its purest form. In other words, we are accepting God. Indeed, God protects man from unwanted thoughts and emotions. What prevents us from aligning with the nature of the divine is indeed our thoughts that fill our mind and other distractions that disturb us, blinding the light of God, which is reflected through our soul. So always keep it empty and clean, ready for anything to be done with all dedication and focus.

Purify your mind every day from the thoughts that enslave you and practice accepting the silence to align with the nature of the divine. Man by birth exists in its purest form, entirely guided by the soul. We, the self, never really existed during that time. There were no thoughts to determine our identity. We, the self, only existed by the repetitive feeding of thoughts in our mind that shaped us into our identity.

We, the self, are an observer, a man of thoughts, with the intervention of repetitive thoughts that are seeded and nurtured in the mind by ourselves and every other external condition, including our nature, family, and society.

Our constant reflection of our thoughts shapes us. A mind that possesses no thoughts becomes relaxed and thus removes the dust of thoughts and worries from the mind, helping the soul to reflect through the mind in its purest form. One should allow God and his way on how to live rather than being governed by thoughts that enslave us and blind our minds from our souls.

Man of his thought is weaker as we are chained by our thoughts that prevent us from reflecting our mind in its purest form. Random thoughts that hold the attention surely reduce the sharpness and performance of one's mind and therefore should be removed in order to align the mind with the nature of the divine.

Everything in the cosmos evolves till it reaches its destiny. Every soul, body, and mind evolves for their destiny. For that, God made everything with a purpose; we all evolve for our purpose to be fulfilled. The soul has a purpose of being born again in another body, for another mind and for another self. By relaxing ourselves, we avoid all distractions, including the thoughts that are in our minds. Only then will the soul and mind be freed to evolve and shine.

The soul and body exist only to fulfill our deepest wishes, for their purpose is to transcend—birthing a new self through the soul, even as we live within the dream we shape. Thus, the soul grants every wish, every thought held in the mind, because to the soul, we are its dearest companion, its closest friend.

Whether good or bad one demands himself to be will be granted by his soul. The only way for us to survive in a world of good and bad, where every decision we make has benefits and detriments, is by relaxing ourselves until we enter the void where no thoughts possess the mind and no actions determine our future, where we dissolve with our soul rather than worshipping our thoughts that can betray and uphold us at the same time. When the mind worships no thoughts, then we are said to be free from the chain of thoughts and emotions, completely allowing our soul to protect and guide us, where begins the path to prosperity, which in turn manifests heaven as the reward of joining with the journey of our soul in the nature of the divine.

The divine potential of the mind will be unlocked for one who ceases his thoughts to exist in his mind. The habit of removing all kinds of thoughts from the mind and focusing on our breath will in turn eliminate unwanted emotions and desires throughout the entire day, as that is the divine nature of a human life. Every cycle of breath should bring one more and more relaxed. In order to align the mind with the nature of the divine, one must prepare their mind to be ready and clean every day by meditation. This allows our mind to be empty of thoughts and desires, allowing us to focus completely on everything we do presently. In other words, we should daily clean the window of our mind so that the light of our soul reaches our eyes through that window, clearly.

The reflection of our soul through our mind is divine and is of God. Whether just a creation or the reincarnation of the creator as the creation, our soul shines the divine light of God that has been shining from the very beginning of existence forever and ever.

From a silenced and meditated mind, man observes the harmony of divinity and finds his real purpose as his mind is clear, which is to be a friend for his soul, who is on a great and much divine journey. In a meditative state, God responds to all our questions through our soul. A man who fails to meditate gets distracted by his thoughts and fails to recognize the divine wisdom that is delivered from God through his soul. The nature of the mind is with the presence of God and definitely not in the absence. God responds to our prayers in the form of thoughts and actions through our soul into our lives.

One should always remember to settle down the dust in their minds, remembering the fact that a relaxed mind in a void outperforms a mind tired of thinking. Allowing the mind to be absent from thoughts manifests the ability to see the divinity in existence.

Observing the empty mind in an empty environment conditions us to exist in our natural form, which is divine, allowing us to find answers to the unexplainable divine nature of existence and everything in it. Therefore, keeping the mind in its purest form, away from thoughts, is necessarily the first step to heaven, a state of existence where everything we desire will surely be brought to us effortlessly and not with the hard work of a self, but with proper meditation of our mind. This will clear the mind away from the dust of thoughts and help us connect with our soul clearly, aligning our mind with the nature of the divine.

A mind in its purest form allows the self to be in control easily, whereas a distracted mind gets controlled by external circumstances and the thoughts that are filled in our mind, as the mind is too busy with the random thoughts that pop in our head, which in turn blur the divine thoughts delivered from the soul through the mind. Through continuous practice of meditation and mindfulness, the self learns and evolves at its best. One who keeps their mind calm and quiet opens a connection with the soul. One who listens to their soul will listen to God. One who listens to God learns from God. One who learns from God joins with God. One who joins with God will become divine. One who is divine attains a higher level of consciousness and awareness; thus becomes a master of their own mind and the journey they travel.

The mind possesses and processes everything that's necessary for the self to exist and evolve till death. The soul that is more powerful than the self, that existed long before the mind and body, has all the answers to the questions one seeks. The soul is the same from the beginning and contains all the information we need to know. All questions will be answered by the soul through our mind only if the mind is still and pure. It is necessary for one to learn and evolve from the soul through a clear mind.

The same soul that gave birth to the body from a singularity, the same soul that controls all vitals including heartbeat, growth, and everything else, sure has answers to all the questions the self seeks. Therefore, one possesses all the strength he needs unless he chooses to ignore or disbelieve.

The same God who manifested the cosmos from a singularity to an infinite number of identities did reincarnated as every creation, including the biological life, the divine soul, the mind, the body, and the self.

The essence of everything is intelligence. The divine pattern of creation from a singularity into identity in all dimensions, including physical, mental, and social, indeed proves the presence of the creator and his divine wisdom.

A pure mind raises one to higher levels of intelligence, allowing them to shine brighter and conquer their desires. It is necessary for man to keep their mind, body, and soul in their purest form by meditation and other practices that they can learn by himself through their soul. This helps in removing the dust that blinds the connection with the soul. A still and aware mind will always align with the nature of the divine mentally and socially.

By nature, an intellectual mind will be raised to higher dimensions when the mind is properly preserved, whereas a stressed mind that is bound by unnecessary thoughts fails to shine the light of God.

The mind in its purest form aligns with the nature of the divine, allowing one to experience life from the center, which is indeed what God has intended man to.

One who taps into the divine music of God with the help of a healthy and clear mind with proper focus and awareness will be raised Godly, which is necessarily the key to the doors of heaven and infinite wisdom.

Disconnecting from distractions and staying aware of the universe inside ceases the disruption of evolution in one's mind. When treated with proper sleep and meditation, the mind evolves as it is not disturbed. Everything in the cosmos evolves into a destined state, so does the soul, the mind, and the self. Being distracted by what's outside will disrupt the evolution of one's mind and slow down the evolution until one chooses to disconnect from those distractions and rediscover the way of God. The more one finds their way back to God from the distractions that cover their reality, the faster they will be the next time in eliminating those distractions and getting back to the center. One who is at the center is strong enough to recognize and avoid the distractions that banish him from joy and prosperity.

One will be able to understand the unexplainable infinite wisdom that shines through them and everything around when their mind is submitted to God. One must remember that the purpose of man is not to be distracted by entertainment, thoughts and emotions. The purpose is greater than what we can comprehend. Therefore we should observe what God commands us through our soul and should take necessary actions, holding our mind in its meditated state.

For God has created every soul for a unique purpose and every self as a companion to guide our soul; we must just allow it to be, as it is the glorious purpose. One who doesn't believe in his glorious and yet unique purpose must take a look at everything else in this vast cosmos, including his own unique and complex fingerprints fabricated by the creator, which indeed is a sign for man to wake up, to remember his identity, to remember his soul, to remember his purpose, and mostly to remember God.

Meditation is an act that opens the doorways for observing the nature of our mind, resulting in an awakened and focused mind that helps us in mastering greatness as our mind is aligned with the nature of the divine. We must let go of our illusionary control over our lives and should let God control us like everything else in this vast cosmos. For that, we must maintain a state of peace in our mind, allowing God to manifest what's natural through our soul. God is the guide for mastering higher positions within our own mind, family, and society. This can be achieved by listening to the soul and learning what the soul teaches you. The soul is the closest to God and is the greatest teacher to ourselves. Clean the mind to know the soul. Know the soul and align with the nature of the Divine.

Actions

Everything beyond cosmos, is beyond causality

Everything in the cosmos, is causality

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested everything for an unknown yet divine purpose that is beyond our perception and involvement, yet for our presence and indulgence. What's superior to our own life is the journey of a subconscious that was born millions of years ago, what we call the soul—the God living inside. The same way how a cosmos manifests from a singularity is reflected in life, which is more complex than the cosmos. The nature of the cosmos is engineered perfectly for the manifestation of life as a miracle in the cosmos, for the cosmos. The soul that manifests every unicellular to multicellular is a reincarnation of the unknown from the void. The same unknown that manifested the cosmos also manifested life on earth by his divine actions.

There are nearly an infinite number of possible actions that are good and bad. They are determining our fate based on how we act. The actions made by us should be from our soul, as the soul knows and brings perfect actions that only nurture our better future rather than destroying us. Always remember the soul and trust in it as you have always done before you were born as the man of thoughts. Every action the soul makes from the bigbang to the manifestation of a mind made of thoughts are indeed divine and are made by the soul and not by the thinking mind. The man of thoughts shouldn't disbelieve himself as the superior of his actions but should remember his soul, the master of himself. Every action should shine through our soul and not by our thoughts that may uphold and destroy us at the same time.

Action is behind everything. From the soul being born as a reincarnation of the God who created the cosmos and life in it to the birth and death of the only consciousness that can really experience life in a way no other creation can. The soul evolves from a singularity to an identity later known as an individual human being and shares the exact patterns of the birth of a cosmos from a singularity to identity.

An imaginary creation was born in the mind as a companion for our soul, known as a self. Years of perception and interaction with the outside world and the soul inside have shaped the consciousness to feel alive. The divinity of human consciousness unfolds when the mind is aligned with the nature of the divine. Each and every action made by the consciousness will be guided by his soul only if his mind is pure and focused. Always remember the soul indeed is the creator and protector of us and the light that is shining through our soul is indeed the divine light of God.

What defines our mental state are our perceptions and actions that shape our reality for our own future. Every perception and action is good and bad in nature, determining the next state of mind, similarly to how actions determine the next state of matter in the cosmos. In fact, all the invincible journeys of all the manifestations are from a singularity over action in all dimensions. Countless divine actions are made in the intelligence of God for a cosmos to be born. Inside the cosmos, God himself continued his divine actions for himself to reincarnate as a soul and later as a human consciousness. Every action is a step for the evolution of us—from the beginning to the end. Therefore, a thinking mind who is only a small part of the greatest divine doesn't need to be worried about his actions. Instead, we should open our eyes and see the fact that actions are indeed divine and what we really need to do is to let our soul shine brightly to manifest every action for our evolution. This will allow the strongest force of nature—the intelligence that is in everything in nature, including the cosmos and our soul—to continue its manifestation of actions in all realms and for all consciousness in all depths.

The mind perceives and interacts for the will of the self. The self that is dual in nature is of good and bad that coexist for their own evolution and destruction as a whole. A mind close to God always remembers and will be on the good side of himself rather than a mind in chaos. A mind with God shines brighter by spreading the divinity that is good and pure. Always be with God, because only then does the soul shine brighter and the self live for good.

Every man by nature evolves in heaven when his mind possesses no thoughts, from where he receives the most divine and the best solutions and suggestions that guide his life to the success he desires. A meditated and focused mind reflects the message from the soul in the form of thoughts and actions through his mind, leading us the way of God. The result of a soul's divine reflection will be divine and is determined by how clear the mind is and how powerful the soul shines.

Quite naturally it is for us to shine divinity when our soul is connected with our mind and to feel lost when the soul is disconnected. One should master the art of perceiving and acting as commanded by nature and his soul, as both are the reflection of God from inside and outside. The divinity in everything will unfold once the mind is connected with the soul. All thoughts and actions from a relaxed mind that is preserved away from distractions help us see the divinity of everything in nature and allow us to learn all the necessary skills required for properly utilizing our minds and helps in achieving mastery. The divine thoughts in one's mind manifest the divine actions. See the divine to be the divine.

Quite naturally it is for the mind to be bounded by rapid thoughts that banish us from heaven into chaos. Therefore, it is necessary for us, which is the self, to see reality from the perspective of a meditated mind to choose and act wisely—consciously and subconsciously.

From a single action, which is keeping the mind always in a meditated and focused state with great observation, helps one master all the skills necessary for training their mind to choose and act wisely in the future, similarly to how action determines the next state of everything in the cosmos. By this method, one will achieve mastery so easily, where a mind in chaos feels his own thoughts as a burden.

What one needs to learn from God is beyond linguistics, as it is unexplainable. Therefore, one must seek the truth themselves by spending time observing their own soul amid distractions, which indeed is the one divine act that manifests all other skills and knowledge man needs.

It is quite normal for the mind to lose its divine navigation, as it is natural to be bound by random thoughts. To regain navigation back to the center, one must preserve his mind always in its purest form all the time. Preserving the mind with focus and relaxation is the one single yet divine act that can manifest great success and happiness in the future.

By relaxing the mind, silencing thoughts, and becoming aware of the void within, one invites a single thought to arise naturally—the thought of God.

From this stillness, guidance flows. Answers emerge. And with them, the power to manifest abundance and prosperity—by the blessing of God.

Thus, it becomes clear: in the sacred emptiness of the mind, man always finds the same God—if he has the patience to recognize and the intelligence to accept the divinity that already lives within him.

Man's actuation and perception are linked to the conscious and subconscious interventions of thoughts and his decisions that evolve him over time. As the extreme control lies in their own subconscious, keeping the mind in its purest form and avoiding all kinds of thoughts will reflect the soul as it is, from where one conquers his own thoughts and outperforms in society miraculously and ambitiously, not with the hard work and suffering of the self, but with the acceptance of the self as an observer and allowing the subconscious to shine the light through the mind.

Therefore it is evident that one's self is an observer and should recognize that success isn't on the road of suffering and hard work without knowing God, but in the roads of peace and mindfulness with the divine wisdom of God that subconsciously manifests the actions necessary for man to achieve his dreams.

Man is a divine magician who manifests his next action from previous observations that nurture over the cycle of evolution achieved over sleep. Every thought that is fed into our mind nurtures the next day. One must remove all kinds of thoughts from their mind and should preserve their mind in void to allow the light of God to shine through them for the good of themselves and for the others.

As the thoughts about God are divine in nature, the mind in void always reflects the divinity. A relaxed mind in void always aligns with the nature of the divine. A mind that is aligned with the nature of the divine becomes divine. A divine mind manifests divine actions.

The mastery of great power and wisdom lies in achieving infinite insight through finite thoughts. These finite thoughts and actions are themselves divine, as are all creations. Thoughts and actions evolve from a singularity into distinct identities, mirroring the patterns of the outer world within our inner mind. Recognizing these divine patterns in thought and action enables us to evolve—becoming more intelligent and powerful than we were yesterday.

Ceasing the rapid flood of thoughts and allowing the mind to fully live and learn from the present moment conditions it to focus. This focused mind perceives the divine patterns woven through all things—free from the chains of restless thinking.

From this clarity arise finite, simple variables—powerful enough to manifest mastery in reality, whether in thought or as actions.

Always witness truth directly; reject blind belief. Recognize that the one finite variable above all is God. Accepting God as the truth is a divine act — one that is powerful enough to manifest other divine thoughts and actions through the vision of our soul.

It is evident: God holds all answers and all magic. A person aligned with God fears neither thoughts nor actions, for they are inherently divine. Witness and accept every thought and action in the sacred name of God.

Knowing and learning from God is only the first step of a good life. After knowing God, the next step for man is to witness how his divine thoughts manifest into divine actions for the better future of himself, his family and humanity itself.

*Man by nature, rises to Heaven
Where God's wisdom lights his mind.*

*Man by nature must return to Earth,
to spread the light of God on Earth*

Journey

*For me, the Heart of nature beats
In me, the Soul of nature shines
By me, the Man of nature lives*

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the soul assigned on a journey destined by God. From a singularity, manifested the light of God from the void as the heartbeat of space - time and everything in it. From the cosmos to life on earth, the divine light of God has been on a journey. The divine journey that started before the Big Bang is still continuing through us into the future as something greater than our own existence, yet within us, as our Soul — while we live as a small part of that Divine Journey.

God himself made the cosmos and the soul in it with his light, for he himself is the light. In his light, manifested the life for the soul to be on an evolving journey. Every creation is the reincarnation of the divine spirit that once lived beyond space and time. All matter is just different forms of God, and every human soul reflects that same pattern. Even though particles seem separate, they all manifest by the same source, showing up in different ways to create the universe. In the same way, every soul is a reflection of God — one Spirit expressed through many individuals. Though each person seems unique, the soul within is the same, a piece of the divine living in us all. Everything is manifested in God's intelligence and is unfolded for the divine journey of the divine being as the cosmos and later as life transcending into the future over time.

The divine intelligence from the void chose to unmanifest Himself, dissolving into infinite identities. He incarnated as every manifestation, dissolving Himself deep within, disappearing from the surface of existence. Like a lotus that blooms above water but draws its life from roots beneath, we exist in the light, yet our origin lies unseen below. There is no root outside the water; but is always beneath. Likewise, God is not present in this life as a separate being but as the source beneath all things—in the void, beyond the cosmos. One day, when we die and the cosmos fades, all scattered fragments will return, and God will manifest again. Like the lotus folding back into the deep bottom from the surface into the deep water, the void.

God made himself as all for his divine child, the soul to be born, by the wind and light over time, guided by the divine patterns of evolution and the divine force of nature. Everything in the cosmos moves from order to disorder followed by causality exactly as in a simulation that even God won't disrupt. It is true that God doesn't interfere in the simulation, as the existence itself is shaped on action and reaction, which does not bring sudden matter out of thin air, but it is also true that the simulation itself is the product of infinite reincarnations of the one divine being supporting the evolution of a divine life form.

Everything is the manifestation of that one true intelligent being. From the birth of a cosmos to the rebirth as a life form — is a divine part of the divine journey of the one divine being. Man as a self is nothing but an observer born in the intelligence of his soul as a companion for passing the soul to the future. Our journey as a self ends with our death, while the soul transcends to the future in a new body, manifesting a new self, continuing its journey, surfing through time.

The journey of the soul is divine and is above the journey of a self. We, the self, cease to exist over time while the divine journey still continues. One who knows this truth knows the real meaning of life and understands the things he can and cannot control or decide.

The Soul that is born in the cosmos, evolves and is reborn through biological bodies, transferring the evolutionary data to the offspring, living eternally while the body and self choose to die. A galaxy of human bodies walked on earth; preserving and evolving the soul. The divine journey of a divine soul embodied in a biological body has a purpose greater than that of us, the observers. No one truly knows whether God made all these, just to experience this complex life or for something beyond our comprehension — but one thing is certain: the Creator has a purpose.

The same spirit lives in everyone, which was One at the beginning, One till now, and One in the future and is on a divine journey of evolution. One must know the one pure soul that is evolving and has existed in all human beings from the beginning to the present time and into the future. One must not just believe but should find out the answers from their own soul about their journey and everything else, as no other way can explain the exact nature of existence and beyond. Therefore, it is evident that the philosophical truths one finds in the deep roots of their soul when the mind is aligned with the nature of the divine, will be the same in every other human, as they are all the same in pattern but only different in identity, and hence are without a doubt the Divine Truth and will stay the same inside every human's soul.

God is capable of reaching out to every man that is ever born through their soul. It is unknown whether the soul is the same as God or just another creation of God. Either way, the soul is the greatest divine being to man that leads him to the invisible God above all. Thereby, the divine truth scripted by the ancients all points to the same philosophical understandings of the divine journey of a divine being manifested as reincarnations. The truth has been passed down over time for the future generations to carry and not to abandon or deny.

The soul not only exists but also evolves by transferring genetic information to the offspring, pushing the society to advancements. The philosophical ideas rooted in the ancient civilizations provided strength for their advancements and prosperity along with the evolution of the divine soul. The wisdom of God has always been passed through time by intellectuals, composed at first and later craved in scriptures, which, from some point of view, is an act of man, but above all is the divine act of a divine soul, which is a creation of God as the one living being that is existing and is evolving through a biological body guided by an observer over time.

Our body is the nest for the soul to live in; our soul is the master that keeps the observer with a free will to choose our path until we separate from the soul and body into non-existence.

The wisdom of God has been reached out to man with the divine intervention of the soul for a great purpose. Therefore, the wisdom of God cannot and will not be lost and will be ever-existing as long as the divine soul exists, and the journey of the divine soul is above all other journeys for a human being to witness.

It is not by the act of us but by the divine act of the divine soul that reflects through our mind that manifests our desires individually and as a society in peace and harmony, as one who is not connected to the soul cannot manifest such magnificence. Therefore, it is the one ultimate truth that has a purpose much greater than man can comprehend. Therefore, God will not be lost and will stay as One Divine Truth throughout the entire humanity and its future can neither be decided nor be deceived by anyone below God and Soul.

Even though the divine soul resides inside every Man, it is necessary for man to awaken into a higher level of consciousness to understand the ultimate truth and to be aligned with the nature of the divine. Therefore, one's purpose is only to act in keeping their mind in its purest form, which in turn naturally manifests everything necessary for man to achieve in his lifetime. Anything else where one thinks he gains more control and has purpose other than that of The One Soul, is illusionary and should be avoided for good. Man's only purpose is to keep himself in his divine form by observance and focus, witnessing the manifestations brought into reality by his soul, reflected through his mind, from his God, reflecting through his soul.

Through the patterns that exist in the divine journey of a soul from the creation of the cosmos to the creation of biological beings and the mind that resides in a biological body, followed by the creation of social structure for guiding them in unity and everything else is part of the divine journey of the one intelligence, what we call God.

Knowledge

All knowledge in all books, are from simple laws of the divine.

Simple Truths are the Omen, to the Book of Nature, the greatest Teacher.

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested knowledge as a reflection of the outside world in our mind as the perception of information. The sense of consciousness brings us the ability to perceive information and spread wisdom that helps us transcend knowledge over time while the soul is reincarnated in another body. The soul only transcends what's necessary for himself to the offspring, where what defines a self and about the world outside will be lost in time, but the knowledge he shares about God, his soul, himself, his society, his planets and his cosmos will remain in time till the soul that is reborn in the future, continues weaving the web of knowledge into much more magnificence that is deeper and more complex, all part of the divine journey of the divine soul.

Knowledge is transcended over time so that the man born to a soul in the future can understand reality and push forward the society much better. In the sense of a divine soul, knowledge is a tool, planted by the soul, in the garden of man so that it is nurtured by the time the soul is reborn.

Knowledge, when preserved evolves exponentially in individual minds with the help of his soul and his world outside, which are later exhibited by the influence of Angels and Devils as actions that are good and bad. For that, every knowledge is infinite and possesses a good as well as a bad side. From a single act of conditioning our mind with relaxation, one gains all the knowledge about all the realms within himself and holds the power to use his knowledge wisely and for the god, for himself and for his society.

Thoughts and actions that are good and divine in nature, resonate with the name of God and help grow the knowledge that exists in one's mind for the good of himself and his family. One should always remember that the mind always aligns with the nature of the divine when it isn't processed by any thoughts. Therefore, one must practice the act of keeping his thoughts, whether they're good or bad, away from his mind, which naturally aligns the mind with the nature of the divine. A mind that is aligned with the nature of the divine, learns every knowledge that is necessary for him, from nature and everything else in it.

Quite natural it is for the divine soul to develop a language system rooted in divinity over evolution. But it is true that the divine soul wasn't evolving alone in the journey but was rolling the divine knowledge over time through us, which in turn manifested all the advancements we witness today, with the help of the Knowledge.

All the knowledge we possess are the infinite identities of some singular divine laws of the universe, similar to the pattern we can find in the birth of the cosmos from a singularity to an identity and in every other creation that miraculously reflects the divine patterns of existence.

Quite naturally it is for the mind to identify the similarities in every creation as they are made by God. The sacred laws of the universe reveal patterns everywhere in existence, including knowledge for a mind that is ready to accept. Quite naturally it is for a mind to evolve into a powerful entity when it understands the divine tapestry of existence, which is some finite yet divine laws as the building essence of existence and everything in it. These laws have been preserved and applied over civilizations, nurturing the tree of knowledge in human minds, individually and collectively, manifesting a better future. One who knows the sacred patterns of existence holds the ability to obtain the rest of the knowledge he needs, which is surely rooted in the divine truths, without any books if the mind is relaxed and is aware. By allowing the mind to align with the nature of the divine, one learns all knowledge he needs to be learned from everything and everywhere in its nature. Nature is the greatest teacher of all and holds everything the mind needs to know. A mind that is aligned with the nature of the divine, learns from its perceptions and actions from everything.

Throughout civilizations, intellectuals have identified and shared the divine simple truths of existence, that when applied on a meditated mind, manifests infinite wisdom - a powerful method to obtain knowledge about anything and to master it.

The mind manifests a mental model of everything based on our understanding and updates it into efficient models over sleep. A mind that knows the divine patterns of existence finds it easy to identify a model in its efficient and divine form. This helps in uncovering the hidden properties that are invisible in nature but visible through the mind as it knows the divine truths.

Knowledge is a powerful tool when wielded, bringing man closer to the depths of existence and everything in it. Knowledge with a relaxed mind makes man powerful, helping him with a more clear and deeper vision in his mind towards what's outside. The best way to teach the mind about knowledge is with great focus and dedication. The mind should not only just obtain knowledge but should behold it in its clear form and should manifest it to the outer world not by the thinking mind, but through the soul, by relaxing our minds.

One of the divine capabilities of the mind is that it can learn itself. We, the self, have only the duty to present the mind with what it needs by keeping a relaxed and focused mental state. It is the duty of the mind to analyze and connect the knowledge we shared with it into a clearer and deeper sense over sleep.

The mind is an invisible creation of God that is manifested from visible biological life, similar to the manifestation of an invisible structure made by human beings, what we call society that nurtures in knowledge. These are some of the divine patterns of existence that resonate with the divine presence of a higher being.

One of the main functions of the mind is to contain knowledge, which, when fed into our mind with repetitive training, helps in more advanced perceptions and actions. By knowing the divine patterns of existence, the mind also stores and processes information accordingly, making the mind more powerful. Always remember that a mind with God upfront is more powerful than one that isn't.

Feeding the mind with knowledge may seem difficult at first, but with repetition, the challenge fades. It is not mere biological growth that strengthens the mind—it is the knowledge we instill, the focus and dedication we apply in learning, the calm of a meditative state, and above all, the recognition of divine patterns in existence: the soul, and the Creator Himself.

All knowledge first manifests in the mind before it appears in the outer world. The nature of the mind is the same for all; what sets understanding apart is the set of attributes the mind holds about a concept. Inability to grasp something stems from missing internal properties essential to form a complete mental model. The mind struggles only when it lacks the elements required to comprehend an entity. But when we identify and supply these missing pieces, the mind constructs a clear image—this is the essence of learning. The one true path to a mind capable of holding all powerful strains of knowledge is to align it with the nature of the Divine.

A mind aligned with the Divine easily comprehends all models—not by gathering every attribute, but by remembering the Creator and His creations. This remembrance alone calls forth the knowledge it needs. When a mind is empowered by divine truth, it naturally identifies the right attributes, for it knows not just facts, but the source of all understanding.

Society

*Nothing God made stands on its own,
In Divine Unity, all is known.*

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the society as an invisible force that guides humanity together into the future. Society is made by the participation of individual beings serving their roles as the ones that are being governed and those that govern – both equally important. A society is made from the collective intervention of individual consciousness as a system to uphold and propel humanity into the future efficiently. More than a system to control human beings, society is a divine structure made by the soul as part of the divine journey of the divine being.

From the villages that ease our life to the thoughts that guide us and the microbes that support us are all part of society. Smaller entities to larger bodies including the solar system and everything else supports each other resembling the power of society. This interconnection that exists in everything including atoms forming matter, people shaping communities, and stars, solar systems and galaxies—teaches us that no existence stands alone. True strength lies in this unity, where every part, no matter how small, contributes to the harmony of the whole. Society is a unified structure of beings, systems, and relationships sustaining collective existence – nothing exists without society..

As a solid society is necessary for nurturing the civilization, both the ones that govern and that are being governed should learn all wisdom from their own souls by clearing their minds from thoughts, practicing meditation with patience and observing the nature of the divine. One should stay mindful with his soul and god above, for him to share the divine light of god that is manifested through his soul into the society he lives in.

The secret to mastering divinity—whether in leading or being led within society—lies in a simple yet sacred act: meditation, and other practices revealed in this book. These methods align the mind with the nature of the Divine. One who follows them sets a divine tone within, carried through the entire day. Gazing upon the rising sun with a clear mind dissolves distractions and awakens the soul. Just as the morning sun emerges from the horizon, the soul too begins to shine—radiating the divine, every single day.

The nature of the divine when once felt cannot be denied or left off as it is the invisible yet divine nature of existence. Human beings are grateful and should be grateful to be part of the divinity. One must be aligned with the nature of the divine as he himself is a divine being rather than just a thinking machine.

Though many paths exist to align with the nature of the Divine, the truest method lies in living the habits previously revealed. Begin the day with simple meditation—offering your undivided time not to distraction, but to witness the rising sun, a sacred act of alignment. To prepare for this, one must honor the sunset, take a nourishing dinner, and enter a mindful, meditative rest. As said, a relaxed and centered bedtime ensures the soul awakens before the sun. In the silence of early morning, meditation becomes the gateway—lifting the soul even before the sunlight touches the earth.

Nature is the greatest teacher, and one who recognizes its divinity gains the wisdom needed to become a true intellectual. Only the one who receives wisdom in its purest and fullest form can rise beyond himself and give his best to society. This truth holds equally for both citizens and rulers, for both are vital to the balance of a just world. To fulfill this role, one must seek the divine light within, and refine it through disciplined evolution. This is the first step toward becoming an intellectual being—one who serves himself, others, and the future of humanity.

As society is a large entity, the ability to master it depends on how much information the mind holds regarding a society and its supporting factors. A man who knows every aspect of the society, thrives as the main actor in society and will be raised to the top.

A mind that sits quietly in the morning eliminating everything that holds space in his mind, will see the reflection of the infinite void through his mind, from where he learns everything he needs to be learned with great focus and attention naturally.

By meditation, a mind serves to God. A mind that serves to God, will be raised godly – from where he learns all the greatest and valuable lessons from his own soul and will be raised in intelligence more than everyone else who are not intellectual. God has granted the ability for our mind to process and possess information about anything. Therefore, it is necessary for us to place our mind in front of our soul considering our soul as a temple. A mind with God shines in society as well as his own life.

Quite naturally it is for a civilization to fall into chaos even if perfectly preserved. Therefore it is impossible to say that a society will not meet its fall with God's vision that flows through intellectual human beings. Like any creation that follows the cycle of birth, existence and death – A society will also meet their end and eventually need to be rebuilt for the future through the minds of Intellectuals and their wisdom. A society at its fall with God, falls into the hands of God and survives with less damage whereas a society without God causes massive destruction outwards and inwards, not as the punishment of God, but due to the inability to see the light of God and not being able to share the divinity for the future of our society.

A society meeting its natural fall definitely does not suffer nor be lost in astray if the ones who govern and those who are being governed are in close contact with God. For those who have obtained the divine wisdom of God, instantly find the best solution as the start of a better one whereas those who are in astray will only create more chaos. Not only for a society but also for individuals, who are far away from God will bring in more chaos instead of solutions as their mind is more distracted than usual when encountered with a threat. Therefore it is necessary for a mind to follow the one divine act of meditation in order to learn from their own subconscious, which in no doubt is more intelligent and powerful than the self.

Individuals, as a collective consciousness, create and serve society as their master to maintain order—an essential step for humans as social animals. The dual forces of Good and Bad, spread by every individual into society, produce corresponding reactions—both righteous and corrupt. For society to eliminate sin and shine with the light of God, the pure wisdom of God and continuous practice of the divine skills granted to man are necessary. Therefore, God must be shared with each and every individual, for He is the divine truth and the way.

Man's purpose as a social animal is to serve good for his society and well being as they are also his family. For that, one must seek guidance from the Divine Intelligence that resides in his own soul which is necessarily the first step one should accomplish before manifesting his ideas into society for perfection and in eliminating mistakes. Always remember that the decisions revealed from one's mind in its purest form are more divine than the decisions made by the self in the absence of the soul. Man should be of God to see the vision clearly that naturally adapts necessary actions for the good of society. Always remember that a man lost in astray isn't capable of decision making, as they will only create more chaos instead of a solution, both in society and individually.

One should focus on pleasing his soul and not in building a society. For when the soul is guarded and aligned with the divine, all things needed—wisdom, strength, vision—are naturally awakened. Society, no matter how advanced, should not be built by effort but by the unfolding of divine nature through purified souls. Thriving in the world is not a matter of striving; it is the result of spiritual alignment. Nothing outperforms nature, and the soul, when in harmony with it, becomes capable of anything. The only thing a human being needs to do is to align with the nature of the divine.

There will be heaven and no hell for a society of God and there will be heaven and no hell for a man of God. For that God is real and is powerful will always protect those who seek the divine presence that lies in the absence of thoughts in his mind with purity and relaxation.

Religion

*Man's reach for the Divine,
A mirror of truth, shaped by time*

*Held in hands of the chosen ones,
Guiding the blind till all are one.*

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested religion as a guiding force—awakening humanity with their higher self and aligning them with the nature of the divine. This connection gave rise to a harmonious social structure, rooted in peace, order, and inner truth – all submitted before the One God. The One singular biological intelligence that was once a cosmic intelligence, born of divine origin, was replicated into millions and walked the earth as part of a grand cosmic marvel — The Divine Journey. In them for unity, manifested Religion.

The darker side of existence is the harsh truth that God created humans in a world where the devil exists—not as a mistake, but as a necessary ingredient to distinguish the good from the bad. Without bad, there is no good; without sadness, there is no happiness. A man who has never known sorrow cannot recognize joy—his mind would be numb, his soul indifferent. It is through contrast that meaning arises. Just as sadness gives happiness its depth, the devil gives righteousness its clarity. The devil was not created by God as a flaw, but allowed as a force—an adversary through which the soul proves its strength. Goodness shines brightest in the presence of darkness. Life, then, is not chaos but a deliberate test—a divine survival game where virtue must face temptation, and the soul must choose its master. Only in the tension between light and shadow can the truth of one's spirit be revealed.

One who is aligned with the nature of the Divine naturally distinguishes evil from good, not by effort but by clarity of spirit. Such a person walks the path of righteousness not through fear, but through understanding. Yet, this alignment does not make him immune to sorrow—instead, he feels sadness more deeply, for he sees its essence with sharper clarity. But in the same way, he experiences happiness more fully, because he recognizes its rarity and truth. His soul becomes a mirror, reflecting both light and shadow without distortion. It is this heightened awareness that makes him truly alive—sensitive to both the weight of pain and the beauty of joy, yet unwavering in his commitment to the good.

God manifests through the Soul, the mind, the body, and all of nature — for all are sacred reincarnations of the one eternal Divine Being. Religion, too, is not merely a human construct, but a divine revelation — a sacred unfolding of the Divine Soul in its journey through existence. Though it may appear as if a human revealed it, it is in truth the one God who moved him to speak. Just as the sun appears to shine and the earth seems to rotate, it is the one God who breathes life into all motion, all existence, and all truth.

The greater story of humanity is the Divine Spirit's journey through the vessel of society, expressed as countless living souls — each a spark of the Infinite. Religion is not merely belief; it is the divine companion of the soul and self, manifested to walk alongside us on this sacred journey, ensuring that the forces of corruption — the devil who seeks to blind and devour the lost — are cast out and defeated. This is the true origin and purpose of all religion: to guide humanity in the name of the One God and to preserve the divine order.

Just as the cosmos requires the sun to sustain its harmony, a family needs a father to anchor its strength, a body needs a heart to give it life, and a tree needs roots to stand firm — so too does society need its radiant center. That center is religion: the light of God illuminating and nourishing the soul of civilization. And those who brought this divine light to our eyes — the prophets, sages, and saints — are truly the suns of our society, the shining stars that guide us through the darkness. From the beginning, all that has brought light into our eyes are truly manifestations of our God — those who awakened our spirit, gave us life, and revealed truth, are indeed our gods, divine reflections, all born from the One God above all — the eternal source from which all light and life flow.

Man, by nature, evolved into a sentient being and came to recognize the divinity woven into every part of creation. From the ancient age of nomads and hunters — and even long before the rise of humanity — God has guided all of nature, shaping the evolution of a singular origin into infinite forms, molded through natural selection and genetic transformation. And through this sacred unfolding, one form at last awakened with consciousness.

In truth, the sensible sound of existence is the transformation of matter over time, just to be born as a human being — an observer of God's divine work. To praise him, to Love him, to Accept him — definitely not to ignore or disbelieve.

God definitely did put man in a room filled with silence and mystery—but through him, reflected His own divinity. The silence wasn't emptiness, but the presence of something greater—meant to be felt, not explained. One who sees the light of God within should not be confused by the paradoxes that lie beneath the very foundations of our civilization. These contradictions are part of the design. They exist not to mislead, but to reveal. Truth is not always clean or simple—it's layered, intentional, and meant to be lived. The wise do not run from these paradoxes—they understand them, accept them, and follow them exactly as they are meant to be. Because truth doesn't bend for comfort. It reveals itself only to those who are willing to see.

It does not matter whether the first civilization advanced naturally with God's divine intervention, or through the influence of higher beings capable of genetically shaping early humans into intelligent, civilized forms. The outcome remains the same: humanity evolved into the advanced species we are today. Regardless of the path — whether divine, natural, or mysterious — the undeniable truth is that human beings rose to the top of nature's order, commanding intellect, structure, and control.

While many theories and conspiracies exist, the natural evolution of humans into intelligent beings is entirely possible through the divine process that is nature itself. God, working through time and matter, shaped humanity through the sacred progression of billions of years — through transformation, refinement, emergence, and awakening.

Even if a higher being other than God were involved in our creation, that being could not exist outside the will of God. For all that exists is bound by God. Just as the sun shines before the earth, and a father stands before his child, so too may a higher being stand before our evolution — but it is God who stands before them all. The idea of an advanced being other than a human beyond us is mere curiosity; the true higher being is God Himself, and the process by which we arrived here is nothing less than the divine unfolding of existence across time — deliberate, sacred, and inevitable.

From the beginning until now, knowingly or unknowingly, we have always worshipped our Gods. For the cosmos, its God is the eternal law that holds galaxies together. For life, it is the breath that animates being. For the earth, it is the spirit of stability and nourishment. For the sun, it is the force of light and time. And for humans, it is consciousness — the divine spark within. Everything that sustains life — family, society, nature, the stars — all reflect and serve the One Divine Source beyond them all.

Long before human civilization emerged, worship had already begun. Food was sacred. Fire was sacred. Trees, rivers, animals — all were seen as gods. This was not superstition. It was the soul recognizing the divine in all things. This natural, instinctive worship — this reverence for creation — is what guided humanity before science, before philosophy, before any advancement. It was this recognition of God in all things that awakened the human spirit and became the true catalyst for evolution.

Monotheism is not the denial of many divine forms, but the awakening to the One Supreme Spirit that lives behind them all — one source, reflected infinitely. So, what is not God? There is nothing that isn't God. All is God. Everything that exists — every atom, every breath, every thought — is bound by the Divine. There is no outside to this truth; there is only God, both in form and beyond all form..

What makes something godly or ungodly is validation — and among all creation, human beings alone carry the power to validate. It is through our recognition that the divine becomes known. We are the witnesses. We are the voices that proclaim what is sacred. Without that recognition, even the presence of God may go unnoticed; but through it, the entire world becomes a temple.

From that temple, the advanced civilizations rose through intellectual human beings of that time by their divine wisdom, sharing their knowledge with each other, allowing their minds to evolve into mastery, hence reaching the top of society. Among the above mentioned civilizations, some manifested the wisdom of God for controlling the society, limiting citizens knowledge and conducting slavery where others liberated human minds offering freedom especially through knowledge about God and the divine wisdom that rhymes the existence which was identified by the great minds of society.

The seeds of religion are movements that appear to free human minds that are enslaved by the ones who are on top of society, manipulating and controlling them. Based on different civilizations, religions existed as differently but with one motive, to guide humanity from the darkness of slavery and absurdity to the light of freedom and peace in the name of God. The intellectuals of ancient times continued their journey in finding God and uncovering the mysteries of the universe. They identified the divine purpose of God and the sin committed by the top of societies in the name of God and decided to liberate the souls that were trapped and manipulated with control.

Control of human minds over manipulation especially in the name of God is a sin, however it is evident that those sinners who stayed on top of society knew control is preservation of the environment and human race, where liberation only speeds up the disorder, not immediately but one day, which also happens anyways whether society is guided in control or freely. Therefore the intellectuals or the awakened minds of that time, started their movement to free human minds from slavery, resulting in the collapse of those sinful civilizations that fooled human minds with control in the name of God. Religion manifested for freeing man to rebuild a new form of society, offering peace and the presence of the Real God.

So many of the intellectuals to whom God gave the strength to free humanity from the sins of demigods are heard over time, interpreted into scriptures, which indeed guided the society with the way of God through religion. However the misinterpretations and misunderstandings of those scriptures made human minds so blind that they cannot comprehend the idea of religion. Fear not, with the wisdom delivered through here, one will definitely understand the philosophical truth behind God and religions. A man who doesn't believe in any religion does not understand or care to understand God and the divine nature of the whole existence.

It is true that man is no God but only a creation of God and this doesn't make man God. It is also true that the creation of God contains the divine spirit in man, which indeed proves the divine reincarnation of the creator as the creation not only in humans but also in every other creation. It is foolish to avoid the divine patterns of existence that proves the existence of a creator, and the religions that passed to the future by the divine minds of those who knew God better than a disturbed and distracted generation. It is also true that the scriptures have been modified over the time increasing and decreasing the value and sense of those scriptures, it is also true that God has given humans the intelligence to validate the values and avoid nonsense from those scriptures.

An awakened and undistracted mind can and will understand any religion and scriptures about God at its purest form. Therefore a strong connection with the invisible divine spirit that exists outside and in our minds is necessarily the first step in understanding religion in its true and divine form. Above all the first step for everything is the preservation of the mind in its clearest and sharpest form through meditation. Therefore all holy religions are true and the truth lies in proper understanding of its message. The ability to understand religion resides in the art of mastering the skill required to control one's own mind from random thoughts with relaxation and awareness which as we have mentioned before is the one divine skill that can manifest every other skill.

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the truth, by the souls to the world of knowledge, through every holy books and gods, for man to accept his religion and to understand it in its divine form and to preserve it for the future generation, for that they should not live without the sun of society, the religion.

Love

Love is Divine, Love must be Divine

From the Infinite Intelligence of God, manifested everything into existence in its divine form. Everything in the vast cosmos has its own divinity, so does Love. Love is the fundamental force of nature that acts as an interconnection between two entities where they coexist. The same divine story, repeated infinitely, forms the reality we witness—from singularity to infinity.

Love isn't naturally made of thoughts but is divine, and shouldn't be made of thoughts but should be divine. A man of God, shines divinity through his soul to the outer world. A mind that is aligned with the nature of the divine can sense the presence of other divine minds, which in turn manifests Love as a creation of God, nurtured by man. Like man, love when processed by thoughts becomes chained to emotions where love in the absence of validation by thoughts and emotions, shines the divine essence of God and becomes divine.

To be divine in love, one must love God by keeping his mind always in a meditative state, from where he manifests love towards every other creation including his family, friends and himself. Only a mind that fails to love God sees it as a sense of emotion valued by thoughts other than a divine connection. One should always recognise the divine connection of love and the thoughts that control him, blinding the love.

Two souls connect by nature and realises the connection that they already share, only when they are aligned with the nature of the divine. When both souls are aligned with the nature of the divine, the cue for them to be in love is the recognition of divinity in the other. The one single act of keeping the mind away from thoughts and always staying relaxed will manifest divine Love and strengthens one to witness the divinity that is invisible yet still persists in love and in everything else. Therefore meditation is the one and only divine action that opens connection with his soul from where every divinity that is invisible including God and his all creations will unfold in front of our mind. A mind that is aligned with the nature of the divine manifests and experiences divine love within himself, his soul, his body, his family, his friends and everything else in the vast cosmos.

Similar to any other creation, love evolves from a connection between two souls nurturing into its identity over the thoughts and actions. Love exists as a divine structure like any other creation – kind of a society, manifested by two individual minds. Therefore the mind needs to be with God all the time, for him to evolve as commanded by nature despite his own thoughts.

Everything that is in nature is close with God. A mind close to God, evolves at its best and for the good, A society close to God, evolves at its best and for good, A love close to God, evolves at its best and for good. A man close to God, evolves at its best and for good. Any creation close to God, evolves at its best and for good as they have been commanded by God and not by the thoughts.

Man is made in half as male and female. Man is only full when his soul touches the other soul. Both the souls should be divine, only then the love will be divine. A divine soul surely recognises another divine soul, since they are both aligned with the nature of the divine. Love everything that god made including himself.

Farewell

After the journey, we fade into the void—where we never lived, nor remembered,

From the infinite intelligence of God, manifested the divine soul for an unknowing yet a divine purpose beyond the journey of the self, ourselves. The soul made the mind and body, there lived the self which is you and me as an illusion of the soul, body and mind as a combination of consciousness and intelligence. Therefore the self is a dream, the dream of his soul, the dream of his thoughts, the dream of his mind, the dream of his family, the dream of his friends, the dream of his love, the dream of his society, the dream of his civilization, the dream of his humanity, the dream of his planet and above all, the dream of God.

The self is illusionary and does not exist during the birth of our soul but exists as a construction of thoughts. Before that, the soul and the body existed without a self.

From the infinite intelligence of God, all creations take their own part in the dream with his divine blessing. As commanded by God, the self which was born later the soul and body has the duty to keep the mind in its purest form amid distractions allowing the soul to shine through him. The duty of the self is nothing but to preserve the soul with meditation, keeping the mind in front of the soul and guarding his heart from sins. With that, his mind will align with the nature of the divine, where the divine nature unfolds itself to manifest the wishes of us, the self.

One day the self has to leave the body, letting go of his emotions, possessions, loved ones and existence itself. Quite normal it is for someone to be sad about death in fear of leaving everything he owned, but won't be when he realises that he was never born and was an illusion made by his soul, body and mind.

The self will not know the end of the soul, body and mind after death, just like how it doesn't know their beginning. The soul that is eternal, unlike the body and mind, transcends into the future over evolution, where the soul lives once again in another body.

Unlike the soul, the mind ceases to exist and the body returns back to the cosmic form which is dust manifested from pure energy, the infinite intelligence, the light. One should understand what truly is his and what isn't. Where he's from, where he belongs and where he goes.

The self exists as an illusion of the soul, body and mind with a divine purpose which is to serve the soul and the creator above all. Every happiest moment the self experiences is the reward for perfectly preserving the mind and allowing the soul to reflect in its divine form, where every sadness is a lesson from God in order for him to recognize the truth which is to protect his soul and let the soul take control. The duty of a self is nothing but to preserve his mind in its purest form without distractions. This helps the mind align with its nature of the divine, which is pure nothingness, a state where the mind exists as void without possession of any thoughts, liberating the mind from the bondage of thoughts. The self should allow the soul to reflect the divine light of God, for which man was made as natural. One should recognize that he himself is a man of God and not a man of Thoughts and should always remember his friend and father, the soul. Therefore one should leave the thoughts he possesses no matter how much the thoughts identify him.

Man has to say goodbye to his thoughts and possessions. Quite normal it is for someone to be sad about leaving everything behind, but knowing the ultimate truth that the hardest farewell for a man is to leave his mind, body and soul which is greater than his thoughts inside and the wonders of the world outside. Soul is the greatest God for a man, for that his thoughts are the creation of his soul, body and mind that exists in the cosmos which is the creation of space, time and mass, a simulation constructed in the divine light of God for a self to witness a blink in an eternity of darkness as an adventure of a lifetime.

Death is inevitable. One must say goodbye to every creation he knows, including his parents and the one divine soul and ultimately the creator of everything, God himself. For a man who knows his soul should keep the connection with God for him to be in heaven during his death rather than being blinded by his thoughts and the sudden worry of leaving everything behind. A man who knows the divine truth surely misses everything as he owns everything to death, similar to the man who doesn't know the truth, but only a man of God misses his own home, which is his own body and soul. A man who knows his soul always remembers that death isn't a farewell but an awakening from a dream, as he learned by himself through his own divine soul.

Farewell, the end of a self, later the end of a Soul and the body. All we are will turn into dust and light. There ends the story of a human being into the void of nature and later the cosmos. The self that is made of chemical and electrical combinations of intelligence cease to exist sometime while the soul, the hand, the light will join its home into the singularity which is pure energy without the self, the body and consciousness.

All exists for the self. For a story from void to a life composed of happiness and sadness. The divine journey of the Divine being, to fulfill the dream of a self to live a life in a million ways.

The divine God made a divine world for a divine soul to be on a divine journey, all for the self to live a life in a dream which we call reality until death marks the end of our dream. Why does everything exist only for a self to experience life? Is the self God himself dreaming a human life? If not then why is a human consciousness at the center of the entire universe? Why does everything in the whole cosmos align with the nature of the divine, including everything that is inside and outside of a consciousness. Do we get a chance to ask our God the reason for our creation?

There is an “I” beyond the self—not the identity made of thoughts, but the silent presence within. We are the thoughts we possess, yes—but we are also the light that shines through the soul when thought falls away. That light is still “us,” for we are what fills our vessel—be it mind or the silence beneath it. We are vessels—sacred and empty by design. And whatever fills us, we become. If we are filled with thought, we become thought—restless, impermanent, bound by illusion, chained to our thoughts. But when we are filled with no thought, we become empty. And in that emptiness, the soul shines—still, eternal, and one with the Divine.

That “I” is both you and me. For while we are not the soul itself, the soul lives within us. We are its mirror, its breath, its momentary form. It is the presence beneath all thought, deeper than emotion, untouched by time, memory, or name. The part of us that remains still—inseparable from the source of all creation. And from that sacred place within, the truth will always reveal itself to the one who aligns with the nature of the Divine.

The soul does not invent truth—it remembers it. And truth, when revealed from the soul, is always the same: eternal, unwavering, and real. This is not a claim of ego, but a truth of essence. We are not God—we are made of thought and form. But when we quiet the self and allow the soul to shine through, we become the light of that soul. And that light is Divine. The soul, is Divine. Not the Creator itself, but a reflection—like a mirror projecting the divinity through the soul, into the real world.

God.

*Who manifested the cosmos,
and brought light from the void.*

*The Creator and the Creation,
The Sustainer and Sustained,
The Alpha and the Omega,
The Father and the Child,
The living, and all the still.*

God.

*Who manifested us—
The awakened and the distracted,
The winners and the losers,
The good and the bad,
The known and the unknown,
The past and the future,
The action and the change.*

God.

*Who made everything, perfectly tuned—
So that we might live as souls in flesh,*

*To breathe in Heaven, not in worry.
To walk in peace, not in suffering.*

*To see the soul rise, not to weigh it down.
To love and not to hate.*

*To see Him, not to remain blind.
To fulfill Him through our soul, and never to forget.*

Even if the soul whispers, “I am”, It is not the personal self speaking, but the eternal essence remembering its source. All that exists is part of a great dream, and beyond the dream—only God.

Our soul knows, and we do not. Beneath the noise of thought and the weight of identity, the soul holds the truth we've forgotten. Ask your soul—not with words, but with stillness—and it will answer, for it carries the memory of what is eternal. The questions that trouble the mind dissolve in the presence of the soul's knowing. It does not guess. It remembers. And what it remembers most clearly is Godliness. It knows the Divine—not as a concept, but as its origin. It surely does.

And if God dreams, He dreams of Heaven. But when He sees suffering in what was meant to be paradise, He also suffers too, in our demise. So He descended — as the one, but in many. He comes through us, as us. In our kindness, in our courage, in our quiet acts of love. Through every soul that chooses to heal instead of harm, to lift instead of judge, to awaken instead of remain asleep. God does not simply watch—He shines within us, guiding, protecting, awakening what is divine in each of us.

He rises in every soul that chooses love over fear. He speaks in every heart that remembers. He gives, even in silence. So let the self thank the soul. For allowing us to be a part of this sacred journey. For remembering the story of God. And for living the wonder of existence.

We are but a drop from an infinite ocean. Yet that ocean lives within infinite drops. We are the same in essence, divided only for the joy of reunion. We are light—born from the Light of God Almighty.

When the vessel is still and the soul shines through, we reflect the divine, instead of our thoughts—and in that reflection, we behold God, the real God. Not a construct of fear or belief, but the eternal presence within. May we live in harmony with the nature of the Divine—always. For ourselves and our families, for our friends and our society, for the future yet to come, and for all life on Earth. Be still. Let the soul shine through. The soul is greater than thought—pure, powerful, and timeless. When the mind is silent, the Divine speaks. And in that silence, our soul whispers who we truly are.

*Everything manifests from God.
Everything unmanifest to God.*

God is the All that is in all
